the welcome address to the ministers and stated he well knew the negro race, the trials and tribulations they had to contend with. He paid a high compliment to the advancement of the colored race, and the emancipation. He said he believed the time would soon come when the colored man and woman would rise to a high rank in the educational ranks, that the white people of the Southland were learning that the negroes had an equal humanity, and that they should protect the women as they did in slavery times.

A pathetic scene took place when the minister said he had no mother and no sisters were seen in the eyes of the two when the Bishop spoke of his race and how he had lost his arms. The colored minister dressed in gray while he bent his knees last on the battlefield. You hold to the hand of the white minister dressed in gray died on the battlefield. So rose a wife to him and your soldiers that they were to give him smoke and diving bullets to save him from being
